

Aftercare Advice

- Don't get heat or conditioner near the connectors.
Heat can melt the tips. Oils and conditioners can make the extensions slip.
- Always sleep with your new hair tied up. Tie it in a loose braid or ponytail and secure it with hair bobbles throughout. Sleeping with it on top of your head can lead to matting.
- Avoid chlorine, invest in a swimming hat!
- Always use a mild shampoo.

Vo5 normal hair, Mega Shampoo Aussie or even baby shampoo are all good examples of mild shampoos. Shampoos that are designed to deal with a certain hair ailment, such as 'Dry & Damaged', or 'Color Stay', all have additional chemicals in the shampoo, which may react badly with your new hair.

Pantene or silver shampoo cause severe damage to your extension hair

Keep it simple and wash with a mild. Feel free to call me if you're unsure.

- Your new Extension hair rarely need's shampooing. I advise once a week/fortnight.

When shampooing your own natural hair, soak your extensions with water and apply liberal amounts of conditioner to the extension hair. The more you condition the extensions, then the longer the hair will last you for. Moroccan oil and Argon oil are both recommended.

- Matting will only ever happen when you're not tying it up at night time, or you're not brushing it properly. A soft paddle brush or tangle Teezer are perfect. Run your fingers through your hair to check the extensions aren't crossing over themselves.
Be aware that all the hair is having a thorough brush, and not just the upper surface
